Defense Technical Information Center Government Information Locator Service (DTIC-GILS)

The DTIC-GILS is a searchable component of the National Information Infrastructure (NII) which evolved with guidance from the Information Infrastructure Task Force of the Executive Office of the President. The federal government's Office of Management and Budget (OMB) together with the information Infrastructure Task Force established an agency-based Government Information Locator Service (GILS) to help the public locate and access information. GILS will identify Federal Government information resources available to the public, describe the information available in those resources, and provide assistance in obtaining the information.

This document provides a demonstration for accessing information sources from the Defense Technical Information Center (DTIC) using the GILS Core Record Elements. This is not a complete set of records, additional DTIC and DoD sources will be added. This page will also be undergoing continuous review and revision.

A central GILS Demonstration Server is available for more information about GILS and access to other GILS sites.

National Technical Information Service

What is NTIS, and what can it do for you? The National Technical Information Service (NTIS) is an agency of the U.S. Department of Commerce that gathers and markets scientific, technical and business-related information. It then makes this information available to you electronically through FedWorld, in paper copy, on diskette, or on CD-ROM.

Want to get your hands on the latest, cutting-edge government information? Always reading about some government report in the newspaper that sounds interesting? Chances are that NTIS can provide that report to you. NTIS offers you a broad range of information available nowhere else.

NTIS provides access to more than two million documents, reports, studies, computer programs, databases, and about anything else you can think of. Every week, NTIS adds an average of 1,300 titles to its collection.

Where does the information come from? From numerous U.S. government and worldwide sources and from joint ventures.

Welcome to the SAIC Home Page on the WWW

Science Applications International Corporation, a diversified high-technology research and engineering company based in San Diego, offers a broad range of expertise in technology development and analysis, computer system development and integration, technical support services, and computer hardware and software products. SAIC scientists and engineers work to solve complex technical problems in the areas of environment, energy, health, transportation, and space.

Founded by a small group of scientists in 1969, SAIC reported revenues of $1.9 billion for the fiscal year ended January 31, 1995 and now ranks as the largest employee-owned high-tech firm in the nation. SAIC and its subsidiaries have 20,000 employees at more than 300 locations worldwide. SAIC is an active participant in the Foundation for Enterprise Development.

West's Legal Directory

The Legal Directory for the Information Age

West's Legal Directory (WLD) makes it easy to locate information about law firms, government offices, corporate law offices and lawyers in the United States and Canada.

Individual lawyer and law office listings are similar to a resume. You may search WLD using standard word search methods. When viewing a listing, consider the state advertising disclaimers to which lawyers and law firms must adhere.

Take a moment to learn more about WLD. E-mail us for help searching the directory, or for information about listing in WLD.

For information about legal references, visit the West Publishing Internet Information Center.
